1# Ma vie de courgette, Claude Barras. 2016

Ma vie de courgette is the life of a young boy landing in an orphanage, his new friends, his doubts, and the meeting with a new girl.

1# Ma vie de courgette, Claude Barras, 2016

It took 10 years for Claude Barras from the moment he read the book till the first display at the cinema.

54 puppets and 60 background scenes were created. There were 15 film sets at the same time for a production of 30s of the movie every day.

Stop Motion movies are always impressive by the amount of work behind, and Ma vie de courgette is no exception. The puppets were done in Lyon, where I live (you can see them at the puppet museum here).

You can watch here how the puppets were made (it is in French but you can cut the sound and watch :))

2# Phantom Boy, Gagnol and Felicioli. 2015

Leo is 11 years old and lives at the hospital. He has a super power: he can leave his body during the night and fly over New York. This freedom brings him peace. Then, one day, he meets Alex, a cop staying in a room next door. And so begins their journey of chasing a criminal mastermind.

All the background sets are handmade in crayon. The characters are also drawn by hand and colorized by computer. The lights and shadows are drawn in crayon.

You can see the process in this video (another one in French :)))

3# Le chat du Rabbin, Joann Sfar. 2011

This beautiful story takes place in Alger, in the 20's. A Rabbi and his daughter live peacefully with a cat and a chatty parrot. But one day the cat eats the parrot and starts talking.

The Rabbi, worried for his daughter, keeps the cat constantly with him. But the cat loves his mistress so much, he is ready to do anything to be again with her... Even his Bar-Mitzvah!

3# Le chat du Rabbin, Joann Sfar. 2011

To create the movie, the team of 60 animators (from 18 to 70 years old!) used 2 opposite techniques for a stunning result: 3D and Indian ink.

Fun fact: Sfar, the director, had a cat named Imhotep and couldn't resist drawing him every single minute they spent together. The movie is based on a comic and the comic is based on the life of this real cat :)
